From Booklist

In the fourth book of the Genius Files series, the McDonald family continues their cross-country road trip. Oblivious to danger, Mom insists on stopping at every weird tourist attraction and museum, while Dad just wants to drive his “midlife crisis” Ferrari. From the exploding RV at Tennessee’s Graceland to the cliff-hanger ending in Roswell, New Mexico, twins Coke and Pepsi are intent on outwitting their murderous enemies and staying alive. As narrator, Gutman takes readers into his confidence and delivers suspense, hair-raising danger, and laughs, along with odd factoids about Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and New Mexico. Series fans will be lining up for book five. Grades 4-7. --Carolyn Phelan

Review

“A quirky look at Americana that will engage curious minds. Those looking for a fun and suspenseful read similar to those from Pseudonymous Bosch will not be disappointed.” (ALA Booklist)

“There is no shortage of humor or action. Gutman continues to do what he does best: entertain readers.” (Publishers Weekly)

From the Back Cover

Coke and Pepsi McDonald never meant to blow up their RV.

They never meant to be shoved into a spinning clothes dryer, either. And they certainly never meant to be locked in a vapor cabinet, nearly flattened by a falling cow, or poisoned with toxic bowling shoes. But what can you do when a killer robot clone is after you? This road trip across America is headed back West, but the adventure is just getting started!

Want to join in the fun? Fire up the old Google Maps and follow the McDonald twins as they get chased from the world’s largest pop bottle to the Museum of Weird. The twins send their regards: From Texas with love . . .
